STORY: Ming-Yi

His penchant for painting chubby round forms has attracted comparisons to Fernando Botero, one of the most popular artists known the world over for his distinctive style. But therein lies a major difference – Thomas Diego Armonia paints women only and just their adorably ample faces at that.

And that's not all for this Italian-Haitian painter who has made Paris his home. Every one of his women is fashionably chic and bejewelled. Each throws off an unmistakable sexy body language in their prêt-à-porter, shiny jewellery and chic accessories that says "I love being me".

She may not look runway model material, plump as she is, but she's not afraid to feel beautiful. You've seen her in the shopping mall, at the bank, in the metro, waiting for the traffic lights to change on the busy street. Glowing in self-confidence, she exudes freedom, style and femininity, accentuated by the harmony between her form and the jewels she wears.

Seriously now, looking at the canvases of portraits, can anyone still doubt the power of any woman to attract and seduce?
